"You're" and "your" are easy to confuse because they sound identical. You're "You're" is short for "you are." For example: You're rich now! Does she think you're happy? Your "Your" is to show something belongs to "you" or is related to "you." For example: Your answer is correct. ("Answer" belongs to you.) Your uncle has a Roman nose. ("Uncle" is related to you.) Mistakes involving "you're" and "your" will damage your reputation as a writer. You're "You're" is a contraction of "you are." It has no other uses. This is a 100% rule. If you cannot expand it to "you are" in your sentence, then it is wrong. Example sentences with "you're": The trouble with the rat race is that even if you win, you're still a rat. (Actress Lily Tomlin) (This expands to "you are," so it is correct.) Doing nothing is very hard to do. You never know when you're finished. (Actor Leslie Nielsen) (This expands to "you are," so it is correct.) Please ask Joan to post the parcel when you're in London. (This expands to "you are," so it is correct.) You said that you couldn't believe you're ears. (This does not expand to "you are," so it is wrong. It should be "your.") "Your" is a possessive determiner. (Other possessive determiners are "my," "your," "his," "her," "its," "our," and "their.") "Your" is used before a word one of three reasons: (1) To show it belongs to "you." For example: your car, your arm, your dog (2) To show it is of "you." For example: your picture, your photograph, your portrait (3) To show it is related to "you." For example: your uncle, your mother, your sibling Here are some more example sentences with "your": Our expert will answer your questions about pensions and savings. (This means related to "you.") If you are unsure whether to write "you're welcome" and "your welcome," then you almost certainly want "you're welcome." "You're welcome" and "your welcome" are both possible, but they mean different things. You're Welcome "You're welcome" (which means "you are welcome") is by far the most common as it is the correct response to "thank you." For example: Your dinner is ready.Thank you.You're welcome. Your Welcome "Your welcome" is less common. It means the "welcome of you." For example: We enjoyed your welcome. We enjoyed your warm welcome. (If you can put the word "warm" between "your" and "welcome," then you need "your welcome" not "you're welcome.") As a general rule, contractions (e.g., "put're," "you're," "isn't," "can't," "don't," "it's") are not used in formal writing. In official correspondence, the normal practice is to expand them to their full forms. If you always expand contractions, you will never make a mistake with "you're" or "its" (two notorious grammar villains). The word "yours" is known as an possessive pronoun (others are "ours," "his," and "hers"). There are no apostrophes in any possessive pronouns. This is another 100% rule.
