Correct answer: correct answer: correct answer: correct answer: correct answer: correct answer: jhm carelink is a web-based application to link organizations associated with ihm to community practices. Thanks to JHM CARELELINK, community users can securely access selected information about patients in the JHM EMR data repository and improve the continuity of assistance. This continuity offers many advantages to our patients, including the following: provides a more transparent flow of information between doctors. It makes it easier for external doctors to make referrals and orders to JHM. Connect JHM doctors with specialists using electronic visits, providing assistance to a broader group of patients. Let JHM electronically transmit information releases to community clinics. It allows the community clinics to consult the patient's clinical folder for the encryption and follow-up of the requests. Allows Social services outside JHM. JHM CareLink is not an EMR solution, but a read-only application with some service-oriented features, such as the placing of procedure orders and the co-fixing of home sanitary orders. The Internet is all about information, but sometimes it can be difficult to solve the answer you really need from celebrity gossip and gadget bounces. You can write your question to friends and family, read Wikipedia articles until your eyelids get lowered or even send your question to your blog. You may still not find the answer you are trying to find. But there are some websites that are all about answering questions - it's just a matter of taking advantage of people who come out happily, just looking for questions that fall into their experience. The answers of LinkedIn æ "I had good luck getting answers on the answers of LinkedIn. While the questions on this site should focus on the business, there is a small handcuft. I got much higher quality answers here than most other sites. Askmeft æ "The variety of questions about AskMefi is nothing but impressive. Today alone there are questions about water resources engineering, holiday planning and more. People who attend the site seem to be able to answer practically anything. Wikianswers æ "This site, as it happens, is a wiki where you can add a question to a particular category. You don't actually need questions or answers, though. The site automatically manages that kind of thing. Yahoo! Answers æ "Yahoo! The answers seem to have only more people who attend all other sites I use to find answers. If I hit everywhere, go to this site. There is a greater chance of getting an answer you can't use here, just like there is a greater chance of getting any response. In addition to these four sites, there are thousands of other sites dedicated to answer questions. Hell, even slashdot post questions on a regular basis, allowing readers to contribute. No way should you consider this exhaustive list, and if you have a site you prefer, please mention it in the comments. I know there are many sites focused on particular topics and forums that can help you to bring you to the information you are looking for.crafting the questionnaire All questions get an answer, regardless of which site you will post it. It is not always a problem if someone knows the answer: you may need to change your writing technique of questions. For example, the very wide questions are ignored. On most sites, questions answers only spend a small amount of time answering questions. Getting around for easy answers before - questions that canin less than five minutes. With really broad questions, there is a certain feeling that whoever is asking hasn't done any research, and nobody wants to do someone's work for them. It can also be hard to write a question that gets the answer you're looking at. More than once, I had to and repost questions because I thought people looking at my question would think the same way ä maybe I thought everyone would think that I had already looked into the obvious answer. This is not the case, however. You have to set boundaries if you want people to conform to what you really want for a response. Most sites provide plenty of space in which to write your question: it may be helpful to make a note of answers you've already reviewed and discounted, or other information that can help narrow down your query. Unfortunately, not everyone who stops on a website and types up answers to random questions of strangers is a reliable source. Especially if you're asking about sensitive subjects, you might get some äinterestingä answers. It's up to you to sort out the information you can really use and put the rest aside. Depending on the importance of the question, I try to do a little research to at least confirm the answers I received. I actually found out that once I have an answer, it's a lot easier for Google to confirm that it was to get Google to find an answer first. There are also more than a few sites that guarantee that you can have your questions answered by experts. The big difference between these and the sites I discussed is a matter of price. As long as you don't care about the quality of your responses, you can get them for free. If you need something a little more reliable, though, it might just be worth investing in a few minutes of an expert's time. Answering Few Answers of your OwnWhile spending all day on AskMeFi, answering every question that may, may not seem like a good time for you, it may still be worth spending some time on one of the various response sites. It can be a good way to kill time, especially if you stick to relatively simple questions, but some people do it for other reasons. Many LinkedIn members, for example, answer questions to help build their reputation as experts in particular topics. Other sites reward points for good answers, although some point systems can be arbitrary and I'm still not sure what value most of those points have. No matter what the reward, though, I firmly believe that answering questions makes my brain go crazy and they are probably better than the many YouTube videos I could spend my time instead. It is.
