Fat support agent I spoke with stated Norton Remover tool is for v24. Then where is Norton Remover tool i it REALLY speaks volumes at a scream when a company does NOT allow you to PERMANENTLY turn off their products. It screams that the company is in financial trouble. There are TONS of FREE computer/network security products these days and I am about to make the decision to switch from renewing my Norton subscription to going to one of those free products like for example, Defender which comes built into the Windows OS from Microsoft. The price for a Norton subscription is beyond expensive, and beyond expensive, and beyond expensive, and beyond expensive, and beyond expensive. TONS of other people's postings that are the same to my complaint, is with Norton's total as in 100% REFUSAL to give any options at all to PERMANENTLY! Currently the only option for getting the pop-up notifications to STFU is for a MAXIMUM of 24 HOURS as in 1 DAY. That is 100% unacceptable. I do NOT want them easily, I do NOT want them shoved in my face when I am already a subscribing customer paying more than the product is worth these days especially when there are FREE options available (and which I am seriously considering switching to when my subscription is up for renewal). I also want to be able to turn off PW notifications pertaining to suggesting I change my PW. I know my PW may or may not have been exposed SOMEWHERE at SOME TIME, but you know what, so have billions of other people's PW and if I choose to not care that is MY DECISION quit bugging me about it. That all being said, Norton if you do NOT have a way to PERMANENTLY (NOT ONLY FOR 24 HOURS/ONE DAY) turn off ALL notifications then when you do the next update on the products vou need to make it a 100% PRIORITY to have your developers change that worthless 24 HOURS/ONE DAY option to include PERMANENTLY as one of the options/settings. For the record, the price for the subscription for ONLY your internet security is just completely beyond being worth its price. I have gone into all of the settings as all instructions have provided and with there only being the 24 HOURS/ONE DAY setting there is no other option I can find to turn off your grief, there used to be a way to alter a setting to turn off all but serious warnings/alerts. But I cannot see it in settings any more. I have just got used to closing said messages for other products, I even had one elderly client who was alarmed by one of the sales messages for other product she ended up with two paid for Avast subscriptions (under same email address!!!) Seems Norton is now going the same way. My subscription ends in 110 days. Nearly three decades with Norton and now - a worthless shell of what was. 2 Likes I know how you feel. I was a Norton enthusiast for tons of years and always as a tech, recommended it. Now I dont recommend it to anyone and tell people it is no longer worth the price being charged. I used to love their Norton Utilities now they are useless and obsolete. I ended my subscription a long while ago and have uninstalled all but one Norton product. The only product I still use is their Identity Safe for my PW. I still use that because I have approximately 20 years worth of account info in there. I dont even think it is possible to export the information in any format that could be imported into any other brand of PW safe product. I know the info can be exported to be backed up but I dont think the export is compatible for any other brand of PW safe. 1 Like I am afraid that Norton and myself are parting companyI cannot stand the pop=ups any more They have become a computer virus themselves A computer virus is anything that detracts from computer virus i with the Free version of Avast, but not with the paid version. Thats another reason why I am so annoyed with advertising messages in a paid version of Norton! Noel Rojas: I have another Computer with an Avast Ultimate license, and I don't receive pop-ups or any kind of advertising prompting me to buy another Avast product.@Noel RojasThankswhen Norton users complain. Ill point em to Avast Ultimate package here has all Avast Ultimate has all Avast Ultimate package here has all Avast Ultimate package here has all Avast Ultimate has all Avast Ultimate package here has all Avast Ultimate has all Avast Ultim and now they are throwing ads at us telling us how much more protected we CAN be if we paid $60 more there $99 more here Now I dont feel very protected at the $100+ a year because of these other options that I could be in trouble. It is a feel very protected at the $100+ a year because of these other options that I could be in trouble. found out how to turn those off by googling it but of course not from Norton itself. [/quote]Chat support:What that user likely encountered was a scenario where support adjusted backend account preferences, which can reduce or suppress certain types of marketing emails or in-app promotions unrelated to Smart Scan. These kinds of changes arent accessible to users directly, which is why it was referred to as only they can do either from your end or ours. These pop-ups are automatically generated based on the scan results and are meant to suggest actions or tools that may help improve your system. If you prefer not to engage with them, you can simply ignore or close these prompts once they appear. User: Is there a switch from your side to remove marketing from my subscription? Yes? No? Chat support: No, there isnt a universal switch on our side that removes all marketing tied to Smart Scan results. Those specific pop-ups are triggered by the scans findings and designed to highlight potential areas of improvement or protection. Theyre not classified as standard marketing messages that can be disabled remotely Just to clarify, you can manage and reduce certain types of marketing notifications within your Norton settings (like disabling special offer pop-ups), but the promotional prompts that appear after running Smart Scan cannot be permanently turned off from either the users or supports side.
