Narration is the act of recounting a story, typically in chronological sequence. An act of narration involves making up a spooky ghost story and telling it around a campfire. Narration refers to any type of explanation or narration for narration of something. It is most commonly used in the context of narrative. What is an example of a direct question? A statement that begins with a question and finishes with a question mark, for example, "Who are you?" and "Why are you here?" In contrast, consider the indirect question. "A direct question," Thomas S. says. How do you solve narration? The first rule is to pick a reporting verb and time frame or tense in the sentence. When did the speech take place? When dealing with current, repeating, or recent events, the reporting verb is in the present tense. When recounting a more recent speech, use the past tense. What is narration in easy words? Narration is delivered and so belongs to the level of discourse (however in first-person narration, the narration answers? Narration is a brief explanation of each transaction that is recorded under each journal entry. These are displayed beneath the journal record for the relevant transaction.
