The earlier you can validate, the better; a Javascript routine can detect incorrect data and prompt the user to correct it before they press the Submit button and make a call to the database. Make the procedure generate sensible results even when not all input parameters are specified. There are many techniques for coding dynamic pages, but PL/SQL is especially good for producing dynamic pages based on database processing. The key factors in choosing between these techniques are: What source are you using as a starting point? All the declarations are available to the code later on in the file. Accepting User Input User input comes encoded in the URL that retrieves the HTML page. The location of the documentation depends on the particular application server you are running. IF (username IS NOT NULL) THEN utl_http.set_authentication(req, username, password); END IF; BEGIN - Now start receiving the HTML text. Currently, the web gateways are Oracle Internet Application Server (IAS), the WebDB PL/SQL Gateway, and the OAS PL/SQL Cartridge. You must declare a type like this, or use a predefined one like OWA_UTIL_IDENT_ARR. If PL/SQL requires a single-quoted string, you must specify the string with the single quotes around it - and surround the whole thing with double quotes. If the included files contain PL/SQL scripting code, they do not need their own set of directives to identify the procedure name, character set, and so on. How Do I Pass Parameters to a PL/SQL Web Application? | | error_file_name | psp_file_name ... To be useful in a wide variety of situations, a web application must be interactive enough to allow user choices. A PL/SQL web application can print Javascript or other script code in its output, to produce complex DHTML that would be tedious to produce manually. Parameters can also be hardcoded in the URL used to invoke the stored procedure. Hardcoded in the URL. IF (resp.status_code >= 400) AND (resp.status_code
