Want to help your fourth graders with their responsible role in decision making? Here are some tips that experts suggest. Children will make mistakes as they test boundaries and exploit their growing independence. By showing your child that you support him even when he makes mistakes, he is showing him that he is © of trust and constant comfort, which will help him not to be afraid to try something new and to make mistakes again in the future. At the end of primary school, they are able to perform small tasks to get an allowance. Your child can © receive money from family and friends for birthdays or other holidays. To try to save you that money for something your child really wants, will help you learn how to make decisions to achieve those goals. This also © it teaches you responsibility © also some financial literacy. Parent-child interactions are the basis of your child's social development, and when you respond to your child's needs and give him the freedom to make decisions on his own, © more likely that he succeeds in social situations. Share with your child an important choice you have made in the past, and together decompose the steps you have taken to reach that decision. You may © want to scoff it so that both can look at it, including a list of the prs and cons of that decision. Warn your child that the next time you have a difficult decision to make, your child may try to brainstorm many options and then use a list of instructions and cons to help you reach a conclusion. This type of conversations will help you better understand your child's thought process, and allow them to see the logical and steps involved in making informed and thoughtful decisions. For example, if your child decides to read a book instead of fighting with his brother because of the command Tell them you noticed that your son not only made a choice to avoid conflict with your brothers, but also © One that will help you academically. Praising good choices can encourage your son to continue making these decisions in the future. Hello. © Be sure to take time to discuss your children's day. Look for ways to highlight positive decisions your son made and talk about why your son made the choices his son made. Note that there are often several ways to solve a problem a. For example, if your son is having a rough time with a colleague during recess, you can talk to them about ways for your son to approach the classmate and what potential results of the conversation. Hello. © m that, if your son is getting back on his homework, you can talk through © It's ways of making it right. For example, your son could book time after dinner to continue working, your son could skip an extracurricular activity at © that they get caught, or your son could decide not to do anything. Can you help them talk through © the different consequences of losing a favorite TV program, losing your friends or getting more towards three, and running the risk of failing a class. It becomes apparent very quickly that the best option would be to leave aside more time at night, and you can help gui de them to the decision that will benefit them more. Taking a responsible role in society and learning how their their affects other people © a good way for your child to practice their decision-making skills. For example, try to recycle or conserve energy. Talk to your son about how improving the environment helps others. Then work together to come up with a plan of how you can help conserve energy or encourage recycling in your home. It shows your son how small decisions and small actions can impact the bigger world. Ask your son to plan a project of In which your family can help in the local community. Can be voluntary in Local food bank, collecting items for a clothing drive, or spending time reading to the elderly at a local nursing home. By finding ways to translate the law of responsibility into the law, you are helping to create a more responsible and trusting child.
