Continuous and continuous difference

The things that are constant and there are no interruptions continuous. For example, the flow of a river, the motion of the planets around the sun, and the heartbeat of a healthy human being are continuous because they never pause . The things that occur frequently or intermittently ricorrerono are continuous. The action continues incessantly does not happen, but it happens regularly. For example, telephone calls in a busy office and departure from a bus station are continuous because they happen regularly but not in a steady stream. These definitions are usually reduced in the use of the real world. Words are not always differentiated, and are still often used interchangeably. When constant is entered in the language around 1400, it meant what it means to go now, and one frequently occur has not become its primary definition until the 20th century. Continue came in much later in the language ... not until the 17th century - and its primary meaning has always been uninterrupted ... or relentless, but two examples of its use to continually place is easy to it trovare-examples continuous work in these sentences because it describes something that happens without stopping: the basis of these results, the Australian Aborigines would represent one of the oldest continuous populations outside Africa. [Press.co.nz] After six years of continuous shots scene, flashbacks and Flash Forwards, fans of the mysterious drama "Lost" will start the final season of the show. [the Daily Athenaeum] But words are often used interchangeably, so mixing is not a big mistake. Examples like these are easy to find: the US military has continuously imposed, pietosamente light it - Punishments - his soldiers even for the most heinous atrocities. [Guardian] There's nothing other than love and all of creation is a continuous outpouring of divine love. References [Huffington Post]. This be continued - OED (Subscription required) 2. Rooms dictionary of etymology I understand what you said, but I want to say is that there is a parallel between the group continue / continue and the surprising / surprised the group? Look at them, they seem very similar to me. All of them derive from their verb forms and gain the properties of adjectives. Surprising is to cause surprise and astonishment - feeling or showing a surprise. The difference is easy to say. I know this sounds ridiculous and probably does not make sense, but I'm trying to find a way to differentiate these words. And I've seen examples like "rain continues," "continue / continuing support", their meanings were very similar in my eyes, that made me really confused. [News] Hey you! What he learns a language!
