These two nations have much in common but there are also some great differences. Let's take a look at the strengths and weaknesses of each one. What country is the best for you? Spain is the best for you ... Image Source: iStock / Gatsi Giù Speak Spanish Image source: iStock / J2R Spanish is taught at schools in all the United States. Recent estimates put the number of Spanish speakers in the United States. Like over 41 million in 2020. If you count between this issue, then a move in Spain makes sense. You can quickly and easily integrate and make the most of your new life in Spain. You are talking about the language you will allow you to find a job more easily or start a company. It is true that Spanish speak will make it easier for you to collect Portuguese. Languages share many similarities that will allow you to learn more quickly. If you want to quickly learn the Portuguese, in a friendly environment, we recommend the Portuguese connection school. You can learn in person in their Lisbon or online school. The Lisbon school includes days of days to help you learn. These include food tastings and food workshops. More city options. Image source: iStock / Trainbow Spain has many more options for people who prefer life in the city. Madrid and Barcelona are great city with a great lifestyle, but the prices are high. If you have the money you are the best options and they are also a safe place to put your money. Where Spain shines really is with its smallest cities. Valencia is such an option. It benefits from everything you could want from a city, architecture, culture, public transport and more. It's small enough to feel safe and friendly and even much more convenient Madrid or Barcelona. Valencia is a coast, with large beaches. Another option to consider is Seville. This is another very convenient option for the life of the city. Seville is famous for its architecture and is also very much Living in Seville You don't need to worry about owning a car. A lot of people choose to ride cycling or walk. The weather goes slowly to Seville, people still take their daily siesta and people never seem to be in a hurry. The time plays a part in this, during the summer months the city can feel oppressively warm. Spring and autumn are the best times to be in Seville. It is also a good option if you want somewhere mild to spend winter. Portugal is the best for you if * Image source: iStock / Sean Pavone Affordable Living Image Source: iStock / Caronb Living well in Spain is not expensive, but Portugal can be a bargain. Porto and Lisbon are great city with lots of affordable options for expatriates trying to move abroad. Prices in some parts of Lisbon have increased, thanks to heavy investments by overseas buyers. There are still many affordable options to find in Lisbon, though. Marvila and blessed are interesting options, with abundance in progress. It is here that young entrepreneurs are opening micro-breweries, coffee and restaurants. Porto is the second city and the prices of Portugal here are lower than the capital. Porto is a small city that has some advantages. Boavista, for example, is just 20 minutes walk from the city, but the prices here are considerably less. If you prefer to live in the city, the Downtown Baixa Area and Foz are both good neighborhoods with a lot to do. The Algarve is a popular tourist destination, but expatriates can still find real estate options at affordable prices. The Quarteira region has great beaches and a lot of real estate welcome. Before the Covid-19 crisis, the real estate sector was bringing to constant rental resellers. Something to consider if you are experiencing only in Portugal part of the year. Source of the image of the residence: iStock / Pkazmierczak The golden visa of Portugal remains one of the best options of residence in the world with the possibility of complete citizenship after 5 years. You just need to spend 7 days in Portugal for the first year and 14 days of the following. These days are the total amount, you must not be in Portugal for 14 days consecutively. The cost of residence in Portugal is not the cheapest, but it is worth remembering that you are paying for E.U. residence. This allows free entry and free movement between any other E.U. country. Invest 500,000 euros anywhere in Portugal and you are suitable. If you choose to live in a low density area, the minimum investment is lowered at 400,000 euros. There is a way to get the residence spending even less. Buy an older property (over 30 years) in an area Å ç å, - Å "Rehabitiva" and the price drops to 350,000 euros. A rehabilitation area is an area that the government has allocated Investments and gentrification in a city. The cheapest way to get the residence is spending on an old property in a country area "Å ç å, - Å" Rehabilitation ". This lowers the price at 280,000 although you should allow the restructuring cost of the property and to carry out repairs. Repairs. They are fantastic ... Beaches Source: iStock / Simondannhauer Both countries highly dot in this sector. Spain has the advantage of being on the Mediterranean coast. This means that the water here is a longest warmer than in Portugal. During the summer months water temperatures in Spain are somewhere between 76 and 82 degrees. Combined with air temperatures in (sometimes high) 90s this is just for perfect. The beaches in Spain can be crowded during the high season. The peaceful beaches can be difficult to find as people from all over Spain and Europe go here for the summer. Portugal is on the Atlantic coast, and the water temperature can be reinforced. It is likely that the maximum temperature is about 75 degrees. This is not cold by any means, but you don't want to spend hours in the water without going out to heat me in the sun. With high Temperatures of the Portuguese summer, some people find more cooling water. It depends on what you are looking for. The Portuguese beaches are some of the cleaning of the world. The country has the maximum concentration of blue flag beaches that you can find anywhere. Both the waters and sand are pollution. While some beaches can be just as crowded as in Spain, there are also long empty traits to find. If you want to relax somewhere quiet, you have no difficulty finding a place in Portugal. Food and drinks from the image: iStock / Vadimzakirov both countries have a lot of shared kitchen. This is not always the case with countries next to each other. Think of France and Germany. Common garlic and paprika flavors dominate. There are many treated and smoked meats and emphasis on heavy rice dishes. There is also a great emphasis on seafood which is fresh and cheap. A love for seafood is not essential, but if you move to Portugal or Spain is a great help. Don't make the mistake of thinking that Spanish tapas and Portuguese petispuses are similar, though. Both countries are proud of their appetizers and will take offense if you use the wrong term. Although you can find some similarities between them, there are more differences. Petispoes tends to have more seafood and there are more regional variations. The only thing everyone can agree is that both petischi and tapas are excellent served with a cold beer.
