And, while we've presented simple pairing instructions below, you should check out our dedicated guides on: If your code is not in the table above, there are a few ways to find it: User Manual: Check the user manual that came with your universal remote. It often includes a list of remote control codes for various TV brands. If you don't have the manual, pull it up from the manufacturer's website. Check Online: If you don't have the code, you can google what you've already tried + the brand of your universal remote. If you want to program a universal remote to your Toshiba TV, the process is relatively simple. Although we can't be certain which remote you have, we'll provide instructions that should work for most brands, including the option we recommend most often: the Philips 6-Device Universal Remote (on Amazon). If you're using a code, then the direct code entry is the method we'll start with. With your code in hand, work through this list of steps to program your universal remote to your Toshiba TV. Find the remote control code for your Toshiba TV in your universal remote's user manual. The code will typically be a 4 or 5-digit number that you will need to enter during the setup process. Turn on your Toshiba TV to ensure it is ready for programming. Press and hold the Setup/Program button on your universal remote until the indicator light turns on. Release the button. Usually, you'll also hit the Device key before or after this one, depending on the remote. Most remotes have you hit the device key AFTER the Setup/Program key, so, go ahead and hit the "TV" button now. Enter the remote control code for your Toshiba TV using the number pad on your remote. The indicator light on the remote should blink or stay solid, indicating a successful code entry. Point the remote towards the TV and press the Power button. If the TV turns off, the universal remote has been successfully programmed. If you're not able to find the code for your Toshiba TV or the Direct Code Entry method doesn't work, you can try the Auto Code Search method: Turn on your Toshiba TV to ensure it is ready for programming. Press and hold the Setup/Program button on your universal remote until the indicator light turns on or starts blinking. Release the button. Press the device button (in this case, the TV button) on your universal remote. The indicator light should blink once and then remain solid, or blink twice for some models. Press the Power button on your remote while pointing it towards your Toshiba TV. The remote will begin sending codes to your TV in search of the correct code, and it will try a new code every time you hit the power key. For some models, you use the channel up/down to step through the codes. So, if you're not sure, try it with the channel buttons-it shouldn't hurt anything. When your TV turns off, press the device button (the TV button) again to store the discovered code. Your universal remote should now be programmed to control your Toshiba TV. Some models may require you to hit the Setup/Program key to exit programming mode. Remember to always consult your user manual for specific instructions related to your particular universal remote model. By using the Direct Code Entry or Auto Code Search methods, you can easily program a universal remote to control your Toshiba TV. You can actually use your smartphone as a remote for your Toshiba TV.
