peripheral or device that you're connecting over USB. USB ports on the rear of a motherboard are soldered on and have direct access to the mother hand, front-mounted USB ports on desktop PCs require a passthrough cable that peripherals such as gaming mice and keyboards generally do not require users to plug them into the highest USB version available. For example, Razer keyboards should work fine with legacy USB 2.0 ports (black) and do not require a USB 3.0 (blue) port or higher. In addition, it is best to connect your Razer keyboards and just about any USB device
